

Employee Spotlight: Ethan Inglis

At Big Horn Armory, craftsmanship isn't just about building rifles—it's about passion, quality, and the people behind every firearm we make. Meet Ethan Inglis, one of our dedicated rifle builders, whose love for firearms started at an early age and has only grown stronger.

Before joining Big Horn Armory, Ethan worked in the beverage industry and as a plumber, but his heart was always set on something else—firearms. That passion started young when his father gifted him a Savage over/under in .22 LR and .410 at just eight years old. From that moment on, Ethan was hooked.

Bringing Passion to BHA

Ethan joined Big Horn Armory in 2024, driven by his love for firearms and the desire to be part of something bigger.

“I enjoy working here simply for my love of firearms,” he says.

That dedication shows in every rifle he builds.

Ask Ethan to pick his favorite BHA rifle, and the answer comes without hesitation—the Model 89 chambered in .500 S&W Magnum. A powerhouse of precision and performance, it's a rifle that embodies the strength and craftsmanship BHA is known for.

A Dream Turned Reality

Ethan's connection to Big Horn Armory goes beyond just working here—it's a dream come true.

“I had wanted a BHA rifle for years, and I got one in 2020. Ever since then, I've wanted to work here,” he shares.

Now, he's part of the team that creates the very rifles he once admired.

When he's not building rifles, Ethan enjoys working on personal projects, painting miniatures, and sipping a good scotch. Precision, quality, and craftsmanship—whether in the shop or in his hobbies, Ethan's attention to detail is always on display.
